ASI directors approve Kapic's election after one-week investigation

By Kelli Martin and William Douglass
Staff Writers

After postponing its decision one week to investigate charges of improper campaign practices, the ASI Board of Directors voted Wednesday to approve last month's election of David Kapic as ASI president.

The board was scheduled to make the approval at its May 1 meeting, but allegations that Kapic broke campaign rules caused the board to delay the decision. Kapic was charged with benefiting from a meeting in which a faculty member of the athletic department was involved and campaigning after the campaign deadlines.

The first complaint, submitted by incumbent Adam Taylor, involved Athletic Director Ken Walker and his department.

This is the second time for the administration problem, so there needs to be some work done on it.

ASI Elections Chair

Taylor claimed voters were improperly influenced through a meeting held for all athletic teams in Mustang Stadium April 16.

During the meeting, members of the sports teams were instructed to vote for Kapic because he had signed a written

11 faculty, staff fast for cultural diversity

■ A panel of participants discussed the need to increase awareness of ethnic minorities.

by Shirley Meissner
Staff Writer

Beginning Monday, 11 ethnic minority faculty and staff members will join in a weeklong hunger fast to call attention to Cal Poly's "desperate" need for cultural diversity.

Those 11 fasting will rotate throughout the week so that two people will be fasting each day.

During a press conference, held yesterday in the Center for Women and Ethnic Issues, the panel wished first to express their support for the ethnic minorities currently at Cal Poly, while stating the inadequacies they find with the university system.

"With the escalation of intolerance at Cal Poly and the hardening of bigoted and sexist attitudes, especially during the budget crisis, we have no recourse but to speak out," said the first panelist, Donald K. Cheek, professor for the Center for Teacher Education.

The panel stated four major objectives: to develop an ethnic studies program; to establish a "university ombudsmen" to open dialogue between administration and minority students; to develop a more ethnically diverse faculty; and to promote sensitivity to minority issues on the part of non-ethnic minority faculty.

Cheek went on to say that the lack of concern for these objectives, by the faculty especially, has resulted in a "sick campus."

Five-day program to focus on civil rights awareness

By Amy Reardon
Staff Writer

Civil Rights Awareness Week at Cal Poly starts Monday.

The five-day program, sponsored by Cal Poly's Civil Rights Awareness Committee, will address human and civil rights awareness in issues of race, gender, sexual orientation, the disabled, education and affirmative action.

"The point of the week is to create an awareness. We think people need to grow to understand how civil rights affects all of us," said political science professor Phil Fetzer. Fetzer is the adviser of the sponsoring committee.

"The real theme of the week is that civil rights applies to everybody," he said. "Everybody benefits from civil rights. It's not just a racial thing."

About 35 presentations are scheduled for the week. Most programs will be held in Cal Poly's McPhee University Union and take place around midday.

"We have 32 different speakers. A lot of Cal Poly professors are involved," Fetzer said. All departments in the School of Liberal Arts are participating by providing faculty speakers or bringing guests from the outside, and six out of the seven schools at Cal Poly contributed money to support Civil Rights Awareness Week, said Fetzer. He said he was pleased with this support.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

New licenses will be helpful

The new drivers licenses will help the already understaffed and underpaid police. The time spent running the card through a reader will minimize mistakes and can save the life should you be unconscious at an accident.

The new hologram lamination and magnetic strip will make it more difficult to create copies and fake IDS. Sound illegal? Never stopped anyone before. The law enforcement agencies are trying to prevent that with this new license. I myself, being technically oriented, have devised ideas on how to duplicate the new license, and it will not be cheap.

In addition, storage of medical information could save a life. Suppose you're allergic to a certain drug, and they use it on you during life saving procedures. With the information on the magnetic strip, they could find out such allergies. More obviously, they could store your blood type.

The magnetic strip is highly limited in the information it can store, so it could hardly contain full detailed records. The card readers for the new licenses have only been approved for law enforcement agencies. There never was any provision for private businesses to have access to such equipment.

If you want to quiver in fear of someone prying into your privacy, perhaps you should begin protesting the sale of scanners, stop the sale of cameras with telephoto lenses and stop the sale of video cameras. As for anyone prying into your life, the magnetic strips on your credit cards, bank cards and any other card in you wallet, would probably contain more detailed information than your driver's license.

I feel that these new licenses will not invade privacy because if it's private information to begin with, I doubt they would have the right to access such information. I found Cindy Lee's article highly uninformed and too extreme a viewpoint to take seriously.

COMMENTARY

Get involved in 'special' causes

By Jeff Logan

This commentary is written with respect to the Regional Championships of the Special Olympics that were held at Arroyo Grande High School on Friday, April 26, 1991.

Speaking as a volunteer for the second year, people should know what an extraordinary experience this is. The Special Olympics are for those people that are physically limited in some capacity. Limitation ranges are as diverse as the people on this campus.

The event brought over 300 participants across the entire state of California to take part in swimming, gymnastics and track and field events. Coaches, personal trainers, moms, dads, brothers and sisters plus nearly 500 volunteers throughout San Luis Obispo County were at this exciting event. Approximately 1,500 spectators were on the scene sporting the best of attitudes.

As an athlete and a promoter of physical activity, I've seen hundreds of local, state and professional level events, but I've never seen as much emotion from the participant, as well as the fans, as at an event as this.

If you get the chance to help or have an opportunity just to watch, hang on to your heart because it will get heavy! This year, when a participant sang the National Anthem (as doves were set free) there were few dry eyes in the stadium.

The look of faces accomplishing achievements is special. Hard work and training toward more challenging goals is something most Poly students can relate to. The determination, dedication and the desire within us that helps us achieve is what I saw on April 26. It's always humbling to see what life might be like without the things we take for granted. Our able bodies and health are precious things. The minds that fill our heads and hearts is even more precious.

If you ever get the chance to volunteer for a Special Olympic event, please do so. If you would like to become involved with committee planning, stay tuned. You'll never regret it.

The Disabled Student Services and the department of physical education and recreation administration have information regarding special programs and upcoming events.

Jeff Logan is a graduate student in the School of Professional Studies.

SECOND OPINION

Driving can shorten your life

By Vinh Pettie

In 1984, Congress enacted legislation which requires that cigarette advertisements and packages include health warnings from the Surgeon General. After studying the effects of air pollution, I think similar notices should be posted on automobiles. Warnings such as, "Automobile exhaust contains carbon monoxide," or "Air pollution contributes to lung cancer, heart disease and emphysema," might make people realize the health consequences of driving.

By visiting the Los Angeles basin on a typical summer day, we can all experience how severe an air pollution problem can be. It's quite obvious that smog isn't healthy when your eyes are burning and your breathing is impaired. But, Los Angeles isn't the only area suffering from high air pollution levels. Health-based air quality standards are exceeded throughout California, including Santa Barbara. Between January, 1986 and December, 1988, state ozone standards were violated in Santa Barbara County on 119 times. In April 1989, a stage I smog alert was declared because of an extremely high ozone concentration measured at UCSB west campus. Santa Barbara, like many other cities in California, is following a global trend toward increased air pollution. The immediate health effects of high air pollution levels are frightening. The University of California has established that air pollution adds stress to the cardiovascular system, forcing the heart and lungs to work harder; reduces the lungs' ability to exhale air; damages cells in the airways of the respiratory system; damages the lungs even after symptoms of minor irritation disappear; and may contribute to the development of diseases including bronchitis, emphysema and cancer. Over half of California's population is especially susceptible to the health effects of air pollution. These are people who suffer from heart and lung diseases, asthma, athletes, children under the age of 14 whose lungs are still developing and persons over 65 whose immune systems have weakened with age.

The long-term environmental effects of air pollution are also very disturbing. California's agriculture industry may be losing up to $1 billion a year because of air pollution damage. This not only affects our economy but also our food quality. In addition to crops, smog damages forests and pasture grasses, creating imbalances in California's natural ecosystem. Roadside trees in Yosemite Valley give a clear indication of the devastation that can occur from air pollution. On a more global level, air pollution is creating tremendous atmospheric problems like global warming and ozone depletion which our children, if not ourselves, will have to deal with.

So what can we do to curb the detrimental effects of air pollution? The California Air See POLLUTION, page 4

Terrorist uses sheet, gun to escape prison

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A Palestinian convicted of terrorist bombings escaped Thursday by using a sheet to scale a 23-foot prison wall and a shotgun hidden outside to commandeer a car, the warden said.

Marten Imandi, sentenced to life for a 1985 bombing that killed one person and wounded 37 in Denmark, escaped from Kumla prison with Ioan Ursut, a Romanian-born convict serving time for attempted murder, police said.

Police found the stolen car abandoned near the Svarta forest about 21 miles west of the prison, but tracking dogs lost the scent, the news agency TT reported. The car appeared to have been damaged in an accident.

Authorities warned people in the area of south-central Sweden around the prison to stay indoors and to not open their doors to strangers.

Soviet official rejects demand for Israeli ties

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh today rejected an Israeli demand that the Soviets renew full diplomatic ties with Israel in return for a role in Mideast peace talks.

"We do not accept any pre-conditions for our participation in the Middle East peace process," Bessmertnykh said after arriving in Amman from Syria for a two-day visit.

Diplomatic relations and peace talks "are two separate issues," he told the Petra news agency.

In Israel, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said today that the Soviets must renew full diplomatic ties, which Moscow severed in 1967 before assuming a role in Middle East peace talks.

He said it was "a prior condition for the Soviet Union's participation in the peace process, and we will welcome it."

Kennedy Smith to be held on rape charges

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — William Kennedy Smith was charged with rape on Thursday, nearly six weeks after a 29-year-old woman reported he attacked her at the Kennedy family's seaside estate.

State Attorney David Bludworth said a warrant had been issued for Smith's arrest, and police said the 30-year-old Georgetown University medical student was expected to surrender early next week.

"I'm very confident that when this thing is resolved that I'll be able to stand by my original statement, which was that I didn't commit an offense of any kind," Smith said in Washington.

In a statement, the woman, stepdaughter of a retired Midwestern industrialist, said: "I feel a profound sense of relief and vindication."

Auditors say schools billed false expenses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twelve universities are engaged in multi-million-dollar "gamesmanship" with the government, trying to claim that luxury expenses such as golf club memberships and resort travel are needed to support their federal research projects, investigators told Congress Thursday.

The federal audit officials identified more than $14 million that a dozen schools tried to claim as expenses related to federal research, which could be reimbursed by the government. The officials said they expected to find more.

"The purpose of this money ... is to advance science," said Richard Kusserow, inspector general of the Health and Human Services Department. "We should not be subsidizing the university for its normal operations."

Kusserow said his office found school expenses improperly filed as federal research.

S.F. detectives search for link to severed leg

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Homicide detectives investigating the discovery of a severed human leg are trying to determine whether their case is linked to a Kansas City probe of the dismemberment deaths of three teen-agers.

The San Francisco Examiner reported Thursday that Sacramento County sheriff's investigators found a single left leg belonging to a female in a secluded channel near Locke in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta. An angler made the grisly discovery on March 11.

In Kansas City, a special police task force is investigating the killing and dismemberment of three teen-age girls. In that case, the legs of all three victims had been carefully removed before the bodies were dumped in the Missouri River. Unlike the Kansas City case, in Sacramento, authorities have found no body — only the single leg.

Six oil companies seek Santa Barbara pipeline

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — A group of six oil companies plan to seek permits to transport oil by pipeline from the Point Arguello offshore project in a major concession to Santa Barbara County, an official said Thursday.

The group, operating as Mariposa Pipeline Co., notified the county this week that they will seek the permits, said Mary Ann Scott, a planner with the Santa Barbara County Energy Division.

"There's been no movement on this issue for years," Scott said. "This is the first step toward transporting some of this oil out of the county."

In making the move, the firms broke away from a consortium of 18 oil companies, headed by Chevron. The consortium developed the Point Arguello wells and bat-

Brothers and sisters. We spend our young lives growing up with them, competing, fighting, laughing and crying. And just when we've had enough, it's time to go to college and get away from it all. It's time to be on our own.

But for many students, it does not stop after high school graduation. Many brothers and sisters follow in each other's footsteps and go to the same college.

College life can open doors to many new relationships, even for brothers and sisters.

were both accepted to Cal Poly, neither were very happy about the situation. But they each have their own lives now, he said, and their relationship is much better than before.

"I'm her big brother so I worry about her sometimes," Brian said. "But I know she can take care of herself."

Katie Callahan, a social science senior, says she is much closer to her brother now that they are away from home.

"At times, it is really nice to have someone in your family around when you really need them, and even though both Brian and I do our own thing, I know he is there for me," Katie said.

Once Katie and her brother began making different friends and got more involved in their own activities, Katie said the tension of being at the same school went away.

Chris Fodor, an animal science senior, and her brother Tom, an agricultural business freshman, said they have always been very close. And since they have both been at Cal Poly they have become even closer.

"Our parents live in Arizona so we take care of each other," Chris said. "I was glad to help Tom out when he started Cal Poly last summer. I look out for him because I've been through it all and I know what lies ahead."

Chris said she and her brother spend a lot of time together. She says having family around her at school is a good, secure feeling.

Tom Fodor said his sister is more than a friend, she is someone he can talk to about anything and he knows she will always be there for him.

"She introduced me to a lot of people and broke me into the town," Tom said.

His sister has been like a mom away from home for Tom, he said, and he will miss her when she graduates next year.

"We don't ever tell each other what to do or anything. We just help each other out," he said.

Sometimes, going to school with your brother or sister can be a trying time.

Gannon Tidwell, a business junior, never wanted his younger brother, Derek, to feel as if he were living in his brother's shadow.

Gannon said that they were good friends before Derek came to Cal Poly, and that might have caused some conflict.

"When we were separated, we had a good relationship," Gannon said. "It's like when you are apart you appreciate the times you do have together."

Derek Tidwell, a physical education freshman, doesn't regret coming to the same school as his brother.

"I choose Cal Poly for two reasons. I came here to play football and because my brother was here," Derek said.

Derek says Gannon keeps him in line at school and they get along really well.

So whether they end up at the same school by reason of choice or not, these brothers and sisters have worked through problems in their relationships and have learned to live together in college.

Noise from construction in BA&E disrupts classes

By Kelly Gregor
Staff Writer

Students and faculty who have been interrupted, irritated or inconvenienced by the construction near the Business Administration and Education building will be glad to know that the worst of the commotion is over.

Noise from the construction and heavy equipment involved has been disruptive to classes in the building for the past two quarters. John Rogers, business administration department head, said he has received quite a few complaints from instructors with classes in that building.

Rogers said that only about six classrooms are close enough to the construction site to be affected. He said the noise also has affected his office. At times, it has been so loud that office workers cannot hear people on the telephones. "It's a problem," he said, "but it should be over by summer."

Raymond Cross, a business associate professor, said the noise did not pose a problem to his classes, but it did affect his office, which is located closer to the construction. The "jackhammer influence," Cross said, "was inconvenient with respect to students for office hours."

Last quarter, the noise level interrupted Alden Shiers' economics class so much that he moved it to the Architecture and Environmental Design building. Shiers said that this quarter his classes are on the opposite side of the Business building, and noise has not been a problem.

The noisiest part of the construction was completed last week, said Doug Gerard, executive dean of Facilities Administration. Grading the ground, which involved using loud tractors and jackhammers, was delayed because of the rains in March.

Gerard said this phase is over now and that the next noisy phase, erecting a steel frame, is scheduled for summer. He said this was planned purposely because no classes will be held in that building during summer quarter.

Gerard said he only received two complaints from instructors about disrupted classes. Both came from classes held in the same room. Gerard said he asked for patience and explained that the noisy activity would be over shortly.

"It's difficult to build a building without making a

Resources Board estimates that up to two-thirds of air pollutant emissions are from automobiles. By driving less we can considerably reduce California's air pollution problem.

The benefits of alternative transportation are often underestimated. Walking, biking, skateboarding and roller skating are healthier, more economical and often more convenient (parking spaces are usually hard to find on campus and are very distant from most classes) than driving. Public transportation is also more convenient and more economical than driving. Car pooling is not only economical but also serves as a great way to meet and become better acquainted with people. If your traveling long distances, drop by the travel board.

By working together to reduce air pollution, we can avoid future health risks and environmental damage. Please try to reduce your driving by one day a week and avoid unnecessary automobile trips. Driving less will result in a cleaner and healthier place for all of us to live in.

Forum will examine effects of 'sexual politics' in 1990s

By Michele Morris
Staff Writer

"Sexual Politics: The Times They Are a Changing" is the title of a forum taking place all day today in the University Union, room 220.

The free event is open to students, faculty and the community and is supported by the residents of Sequoia Hall and endorsed by Cal Poly, the housing department, the psychology and human development department and the San Luis Obispo Rape Crisis Center.

The schedule is as follows:

12 to 1 p.m. — Psychology and human development professor Fred Stultz will discuss "New Masculine Sexuality."

1 to 2 p.m. — A survivor panel from the Rape Crisis Center, of which all members have survived some kind of sexual assault, will answer questions on what options and resources are available to sexual assault survivors.

2 to 3 p.m. — Ray Berrett of Public Safety will give a presentation that he gives nationwide on "Personal Safety."

3 to 4 p.m. — Representatives from the Rape Crisis Center will address the issues facing adults who were molested as children.

9 a.m. to 4 p.m. — An all-day presentation will address men's and women's feelings about violence in relationships by the Battered Women's Alternatives group (formerly the Oakland Men's Project) from Concord, California.

"I think this is an attempt to build bridges between men and women and to promote understanding and support for individuals who have had trauma in relationships," said Stultz.

4 p.m. — Reception in Sequoia Hall for the speakers and those who attended the forum.

There will be resource people from Cal Poly and the Rape Crisis Center available throughout the day in the U.U. to answer questions and supply information.

Stultz suggested that anyone wanting to attend the Battered Women's Alternative presentation should sign up ahead of time by calling Resident Student Development at 756-5600, but people will be admitted at the door if there is space available.

This presentation was originally developed to prepare educators to work with teenagers, but it has been revised to cover the unique circumstances in dealing with college students, said Stultz. Some of the subjects to be covered are relationships, vulnerability, dysfunctional relationships and abuse and violence prevention. There also will be role-playing activities.

Christine Tinsley, coordinator of student development in the housing department, said that although this is the first event of its kind, it is likely to continue in the future. "It is important for getting self-awareness," she said.

She also said that this event is for everyone because "it's very likely that you would know someone who has been victimized by violence."

Stultz also sees a possibility that the forum will become an annual event.

"We have a neat relationship with our sponsors, but we would like to broaden our base of support to involve other organizations in the community like Child Protective Services," he said.

"I think this is an attempt to build bridges between men and women and to promote understanding and support for individuals who have had trauma in relationships and to look at new possibilities how people can relate in intimate relationships," Stultz said.

little noise," Gerard said. "The majority of classes are going on with relatively little interruption."

Rogers said arrangements have been made with the library to hold some interrupted classes there. The agreement has been an acceptable solution to most instructors and students.

"It's not bad," Joe Prunty, a speech communication senior, said about having his class moved. Prunty said it is much better than before when the construction disrupted his marketing class in the Business building. Before moving to the library, his instructor tried to conduct class outside.

"That was a joke," Prunty said, because of the student traffic in the area.

Gerard said construction is scheduled for completion in fall of 1992. The existing building, he said, will then be remodeled and should be finished in the summer or fall of 1993.

Men's track looks toward CCAA finals in Bakersfield

By Jeff Krump
Staff Writer

The track at UC San Diego has burn marks on it. It was scorched last weekend when Cal Poly's Jim Sorensen and Brian Strieff raced around it to record the second-best NCAA Division II times in the country in their respective events.

Sorensen recorded a 3:45.86 in the 1,500 meters, a time that automatically qualifies him for the national championships. "That 3:45 is one of the best marks anywhere (Division I or II) right now," said Cal Poly Head Coach Tom Henderson.

Strieff scored a 1:49.73 in the 800 meters, the fifth best all-time mark at Cal Poly.

The Cal Poly men's track team is tuned up and ready to win the California Collegiate Athletic Association Championships today and tomorrow in Bakersfield.

Henderson rested most of his team last weekend in preparation for the conference championships.

He took only a skeleton crew to compete at UC Santa Barbara and UC San Diego.

"We had to take care of a few holes we needed to fill," said Henderson.

Strieff and Sorensen patched a few divots and Gabe Manville filled a hole by qualifying for the national championships in the high jump. Manville cleared 7-0 at UC Santa Barbara.

The Mustangs are favored to repeat as CCAA champions this weekend, but Henderson indicated the victory would not come easy.

"It's going to come down to the mile relay at 6:35 Saturday night," said Henderson.

Six teams will compete in Bakersfield for the conference title including Cal Poly, Cal State Los Angeles, Cal State Bakersfield, UC Riverside, UC San Diego and Cal Poly Pomona.

Teams are allowed to enter no more than 32 athletes in the championships, but the Mustangs have a squad of about twice this size.

"It's a very traumatic situation," said Henderson. "Half the team will sit at home. You take the most effective scorers you have."

"We're relying on other people to score against Cal Poly Pomona," said Henderson.

Henderson is hoping that in certain events weaker schools will steal points away from a strong Pomona team. The Mustang coach is planning on his team practically sweeping other events.

The Mustangs will not be competing in the shot put, javelin, 400 meters and the hammer throw. The Mustangs are hoping schools other than Pomona will take first in these events, thus depriving Pomona of points.

Henderson's squad has seven pole vaulters traveling to Bakersfield and expects to take at least the top four places in this event.

Other events the Mustangs expect to score well in include the 10,000 meters, 5,000 meters, 800 meters, 1,500 meters, steeplechase and mile relay.

Mustangs stumble at nationals

■ Women's tennis crushes Shippensburg before falling to UC Davis.

By Travis Swafford
Staff Writer

The Cal Poly women's tennis team completed its competition in the national finals Wednesday. It returned home from UC Davis with good and bad news.

Head Coach Kevin Platt said his team "came out with a vengeance" in its first match against Shippensburg University. The Mustangs showed no mercy, crushing their opponents 9-0.

The win was especially sweet for the Mustangs because the Shippensburg coach was one of the selectors that failed to choose any Cal Poly doubles teams for the individual finals tournament. "My girls had a score to settle, and they did," said Platt.

At No. 1 and No. 2 singles, Vicki Kanter and Debbie Matano set the pace for the Mustangs. Both women defeated their opponents, 6-0, 6-0.

The rest of the team followed their lead, easily defeating their opponents. The only close match came at No. 3 doubles, where the combination of Erin Green and Julie Ciancio defeated Shippensburg's doubles team, 6-3 6-4.

Unfortunately for the Mustangs, that is when the good news ended. Poly faced off against UC Davis in the second round. The Aggies have given the Mustangs trouble all season.

In contrast to their first match, Kanter and Debbie Matano were both put away in straight sets. Kanter lost, 6-3, 6-2, and Matano lost to Chris Pohl, 6-0, 6-3.

Erin Green fought a closer match at No. 3 singles. But she eventually lost, 5-7, 6-0, 6-3. Tracy Matano grabbed the Mustangs first win, defeating her opponent, 3-6, 6-4, 7-5. Alison Lean then dropped a tough match at No. 5, 6-7 (7-2) 6-3 6-2. The Mustangs garnered their second win of the match at No. 6 singles. Julie Ciancio easily defeated her opponent, 6-3, 6-0.

With the match score 4-2 at the conclusion of singles play, Poly's Kanter-Lean combination came up short, however, falling to the Davis duo, 6-2, 7-6 (7-4).

The loss put the score at 5-2. The last two matches were canceled because the match was already won.

Individual competition began on Monday. Kanter defeated Donna Ewing of Pomona, 6-3, 6-3. Then she fell to Leslie McCullough of Denver, 6-3, 7-5. Debbie Matano defeated Chris Logan of Shippensburg, 7-6 (7-1), 6-1, before she fell to Davis' Pohl, 4-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Poly's number three player Erin Green advanced through the first two rounds of play, winning two three set matches. She defeated Michelle King of Abilene Christian, 3-6, 6-3, 6-1. Then she beat Jennifer Holmsten of Berry, 6-2, 3-6, 6-0. In the third round, Green fell to Laura Simmons of Air Force, 7-6 (12-10) 6-3.

Fetzer said that he anticipates a few programs to be highlights of the week. They include:

— Speaker Diane Joyce, the plaintiff in a U.S. Supreme Court case which proved to be an important victory for women who hold jobs typically held by men. Mon. 1 p.m. U.U. 220.

— Patti Roberts, Executive Director of the National Center for Lesbian Rights. Her emphasis will be on the future of family law and domestic partnerships for homosexual couples. Weds. 2 p.m. U.U. 220.

— Fred Stultz, Cal Poly professor of Human Development and Psychology, will discuss the manner in which the rights of men are being abridged and denied in today's society. Thurs. 12 p.m., U.U. 220.

"This one will draw a big crowd. I think males are feeling they aren't getting recognition," Fetzer said.

He said he expects a turnout of about 1,000 people for the week's events. "That's a low estimate."

"Last year we had 17 presenters and 600 attendees," he said. "We made it a Civil Rights Awareness Day last year."

The sponsoring committee for Civil Rights Awareness Week is a student club that began a year and a half ago when the members of Fetzer's Civil Rights in America class decided they wanted to do something about civil rights.

Political science senior Carrie Czajkowski, the publicity manager for Civil Rights Awareness Week, said she has been interested in civil rights "for a long time."

The Civil Rights Awareness Committee, which is also chartered by ASI, is trying to communicate "awareness of different ideas and different viewpoints," she said.

Czajkowski said she wants people to be able to see life through a different perspective as a result of the awareness program.

"Ideally, we want to get a cross-section of Cal Poly to attend the programs."

"Last year we had a really good turnout."

STATE

tled for years to gain authorization to ship the oil by tanker.

The county has opposed tanker shipments, which are cheaper, on the grounds they are less safe environmentally.

The announcement was cheered by environmentalists, who said it represented a weakening of the consortium.

"This is a crack in the dike," said Henry Feniger, president of Get Oil Out, which opposes offshore oil development. "It's definitely a step in the right direction."

Under the proposal, oil would be piped from offshore platforms to a processing plant at Gaviota, about 25 miles west of Santa Barbara. A pipeline of less than a mile would be constructed to connect the plant to an existing pipeline that would carry the oil to inland refineries, Scott said.

Chevron and other firms in the consortium want to use tankers to transport the oil from the processing plant.

A Chevron spokesman said the company was not happy with the decision, but denied it signaled a breakup of the consortium.

"It's thrown some cold water on the unity and camaraderie of the partnership, but the partnership's still intact," said G. Michael Marcy. "These six companies still own a percentage of the production. It's their decision what they choose to do with the oil."

pledge to support the Instructional-Related Activities (IRA) fee increase referendum. If the referendum passes in May, student fees will increase to help support the athletic department.

This year was not the first time athletic department officials have been accused of interfering in ASI elections. In 1986, administration members of the athletic department allegedly influenced students to vote for certain candidates.

"First of all, ASI and the Elections Committee do not have any kind of rule stating that... the administration is prohibited from getting involved in ASI elections," said Burnie Wohlford, ASI Elections Chair.

Wohlford said ASI developed a resolution later in 1986 which would prohibit administration from such activity. He said the resolution went to President Warren Baker's office but that no action was taken.

Wohlford said, "Obviously these issues need to be changed. This is the second time for the administration problem, so there needs to be some work done on it. But the students voted for Dave Kapic, and he won."

Bob Walters, ASI Elections Committee Chairman, said that since the 1986 resolution, the administration has held to a "gentlemen's agreement" to not become involved in elections.

Mark Denholm, ASI Chairman of the Board, said, "ASI cannot restrict university employees on anything. The university has to set a policy to restrict state employees from being involved in these elections, or anything else to do with ASI, and they have no such policy."

"That was what that resolution in 1986 was for — to urge the university to pass some kind of regulations, but they haven't. We will try again to encourage them to do the same thing so this type of problem doesn't happen."

The results of the election on April 17 and 18 showed that Kapic won by 15 votes. Wohlford said, "Even if there were 500 to 600 people at that meeting, there still would be a run-off because you have to win by half the votes plus one."

"Second, in the run-off, Kapic won by 300 votes. There was a 2,500 person turnout which is about 17 percent of the student body and from there I can assume that not every person at the athletic event (meeting) turned out (to vote). It was estimated that there was possibly 150 people at the event, which is not comparable to the 300 (vote) win margin."

Current ASI President Adam Taylor congratulated Kapic during the meeting and said that the complaint was not made to taint his victory.

"The reason I submitted the complaint was to make sure that in the years following... we can do something to make sure that when we have a student election on this campus, regardless of whether it is for Board of Directors, president, vice-president or a fee referendum, that it is entirely the students who make the decision and that in no way does the administration, faculty and staff of this campus interfere with the process," said Taylor.

The second complaint claimed Kapic had been involved in active campaigning during the election through phone solici-tions. Wohlford said, however, that phone solicitation is not officially considered active campaigning and that both candidates were involved in phone activity.

"Dave Kapic came to Bob Walters and I to see if calling on the phone was okay. I asked Bob and we gave him our okay. We were the ASI Elections Committee giving him the okay — therefore, it was valid to do it (phone solicitation)," said Wohlford.

"We investigated both complaints, which said the rules were abused, but no election rules were broken."

In the complaint dated May 1, crop sciences major Peter Iverson said Kapic's campaign workers broke the campaigning deadline by making phone solicitations asking students to vote for Kapic. Iverson said he received calls from Kapic's campaign on the day of the primary and the run-off elections, and that the election rules call for campaigning to end on the day of the election.

Kapic said Wednesday that his campaign workers made phone solicitations using the Greek Directory, but that he did not make any calls himself. He said they made the calls on the day of the primary election and the night before the run-off.

Walters said election rules call for "active campaigning" to end at 6 p.m. on the night before elections, but that Kapic did not break the rule because phone calls are not considered active campaigning.

Phone solicitations have been a regular part of ASI campaigns for the past several years, Walters said. "If the calls were against the rules, then Taylor's campaign would be equally guilty," he said. "Taylor's campaign was definitely making calls after the 6 p.m. deadline."

Taylor said his campaign committee made phone solicitations on the night before the elections.

In a letter to Mustang Daily, Franklin Burris, ASI executive vice president, said the deadline for active campaigning was not at 6 p.m. on the night before elections, but only the day of elections.

Walters said although the 6 p.m. deadline is not explicitly stated in the election rules, it was implied. But, he said, the evening deadline was specifically mentioned during a mandatory candidates' meeting.

Walters said the controversy over the time of the deadline is pointless because phone solicitation is not considered active campaigning, and is allowed at any point in the campaign.

Denholm said there was really no way to enforce any kind of rule which forbids candidates from calling people after a specific time for election purposes.

Kapic said the unexpected controversy over his election had been difficult. I'm glad it's over, and now we can get down to business," he said.

In other action Wednesday, the Board passed a recommendation by the Ad Hoc Committee to appoint Shawn Warren, ASI Greek Relations, as next year's ASI Executive Vice President.

disease that has four major symptoms: hypocrisy, denial, elitism and tokenism," concluded Cheek.

A remedy for the situation seems to be a resounding call, by the panelists, for a more comfortable atmosphere for ethnic minority students.

Director of Student Academic Services, Armando Pezo-Silva, was concerned that it is harder to keep minority students at Cal Poly than to get them here. He said students leave not because they lack academic potential but because Cal Poly lacks a culturally diverse atmosphere.

"There is a myth that minority students are unqualified" and not academically prepared when they enter Cal Poly, said Silva.

He further explained that the myth necessitates the feeling of insensitivity that many minority students feel.

"Even though we speak with minority students all the time, it still surprised us how discouraged, frustrated and even angry they were," said Luis Torres, assistant professor for the English department, in an interview before the conference.

He said that the administration is much more supportive of minority issues than the faculty.

"I am disappointed by the reaction of the faculty in the Academic Senate who are not sensitive to minority issues," said Torres. The Academic Senate is the chief governing body in which faculty can discuss policy, explained Torres.

"The faculty ignores the situation," said panelist Willi Coleman, director for the Center For Women and Ethnic Issues. She continued, "That kind of attitude kills ideas."

Shirley Arceo, a senior business major who works in the Multi-Cultural Center, said she was "moved" when she heard of the fast.

Arceo, who interacts daily with minority students, said, "I think students will really like it, that teachers would do this for us." Arceo is of Filipino descent.

M.E.Ch.A. President, Refugio Rodriguez, an agriculture and engineering technology junior, said, "It is sad that they have to go to such lengths to bring conscientiousness to Cal Poly."

Another panelist, Gloria Velasquez, professor in the foreign languages and literatures department, expressed a more positive outlook on awareness with regard to the non-minority students she teaches.

"Students are becoming more political," said Velasquez, but the story is not the same for many non-ethnic faculty members.

"There is a lot of lip service and not enough done," included Velasquez.

The fast will end at 4 p.m. Friday at a press conference at the Embassy Suites Hotel.

Are Student Ethics in Decay?

By Kristi McDowell

George Gresham doesn't think his generation is a selfish, money-hungry bunch of materialists.

But Gresham, 24, is in the 18- to 30-year-old age category, recently dubbed the "I Deserve It" generation by Michael Josephson, founder of the California-based Josephson Institute for the Advancement of Ethics who says typical characteristics of this age group include frequent cheating, lying on resumes, and value systems based on personal gratification, materialism and winning.

The Josephson Institute released "The Ethics of American Youth: A Warning and a Call to Action" in the fall. The 80-page study — a combination of results from a number of surveys on different topics conducted by organizations such as Gallup and the U. of California, Los Angeles — discusses values and honesty as a few subjects of deterioration in the last decade or so.

Gresham, president of Northern Arizona U.'s accounting fraternity, Beta Alpha Psi, doesn't agree with Josephson's accusations.

"I don't find support in those surveys," he said. "The people I know are, I think, very morally outstanding."

Money-Back Guarantee:
Get a Job or You Don't Pay

Miami-Dade Community College in Florida is putting its money where its mouth is.

The college is so confident of its programs that, in some areas of study, if their students don't get jobs after graduation the college will refund the students' tuition and fees.

It's all part of a plan to make students aware of job availability and make the employers aware of the students' abilities.

All health and nursing programs are covered under the guarantee, as well as some vocational programs such as funeral services, graphic arts and pre-service training.

Students must seek entry-level employment within three months of their certification. If they provide 10 rejection letters, the college will repay the cost of tuition, which is approximately $300 per year.

"There is tremendous need for those students anyway," said Ted Hughes, interim chancellor for the Dallas County Community College system in Texas. "The jobs are waiting and there is not so much liability for the college."

Schools Mandate Diversity Classes

By Jaemin Kim

■ The Daily Targum
Rutgers U.

They came, they conquered, and they prospered. In American history classes, students have been taught that "they" referred to European Americans, often excluding other races in the population.

But now educators say the new watchword is multiculturalism.

"We've seen groups left out of American history," said Olivia Mitchell, a Rutgers U. professor in the Africana studies and women's studies departments. "We should learn about the many types of people who came (to America), became involved and played a role," she said.

Recently high schools and universities have adjusted their curriculums in reaction to criticism that students' senses of history are skewed by a Eurocentric focus in the classroom.

Public high schools in New Jersey now require students to take courses in world history and world culture. Rutgers students — beginning with this year's freshman class — must fulfill a non-Western course requirement to graduate.

At the U. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, 40 percent of liberal arts classes offered this semester deal in some way with issues of race, ethnic diversity or culture inside and outside of the United States. A requirement passed at Michigan last semester requires that all first-year students take a course dealing with diversity, ethnicity or race.

But Rutgers' Mitchell said high schools have not adequately tackled the problem, and at universities "there's still a strong Eurocentric slant on the mainstream of how courses are taught."

Adam Scrupski, director of the teacher education program at the Rutgers Graduate School of Education, said multiculturalism has met resistance from those who think a unified America means melting into the mainstream rather than tossing about in a "salad bowl."

"Some people suggest it is divisive — that many immigrant groups want their children to be socialized in Western culture as quickly as possible," Scrupski said. But the recent call to diversify academic curriculum reflects the need to recognize the painful methods of socialization people have experienced, he said.

Kenneth Carlson, a professor at the Rutgers Graduate School of Education, said Eurocentrism

Fill 'er Up: Natural Gas Gaining Fuel Footage

Physical Plant Converts Vehicles Students Build Engines for Race

By Michele Jorgenson

■ The Daily Athenaeum

West Virginia U.

As many as 50 West Virginia U. vehicles may soon be running on fumes — but not because they'll be out of gas.

Physical Plant Director Dorsey Jacobs signed a contract last semester with a local gas company to run the physical plant trucks on natural gas rather than liquid gasoline. The new system was projected to save the university $9,000 before the price of gasoline skyrocketed following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, Jacobs said.

Hope Gas Inc. contributed $85,000 by buying a natural gas compressor station and conversion units for the vehicles. Consolidated Natural Gas, Hope's parent company, is giving an additional $500,000 grant to the project.

Among the advantages to natural gas, which is in a vaporous form instead of a liquid form, is that it does not emit exhaust like gasoline does, Jacobs said. "You could plant a flower bed behind one of these exhaust pipes," he said of the natural gas-powered vehicles, which can be started five times faster because of a high octane level in the fuel. Jacobs also said natural gas is "eight times safer" during an accident than liquid gasoline. If an accident totally destroyed a vehicle, the natural gas would simply evaporate rather than explode.

Each of the trucks will be equipped with a conversion unit on the carburetor, Jacobs said, adding that the gas tank on one of the trucks is very similar to a tank for a gas grill.

He said the system does have one glitch: although a vehicle could travel approximately 80 miles on a full tank of natural gas, it hasn't been proven for long trips because there aren't many gas stations supplied with natural gas.

Initially, only 50 physical plant vehicles will be running on natural gas, but Jacobs said he eventually wants to have 200 vehicles converted to the new system. He said the fact that the contract was signed in the midst of the Persian Gulf crisis is pure coincidence.

Engineering students at 24 major universities will compete this June in a cross-country road trip driving the first pickup trucks designed to be powered by natural gas, a cleaner-burning and less expensive fuel than gasoline.

Northwestern U.'s chapter of the Society of Automotive Engineers won one of the bids to redesign the engine, emissions system and fuel system of a 1990 pickup truck provided in November by General Motors, who is co-sponsoring the competition with Argon National Lab, the U.S. Department of Energy and the National Society of Automotive Engineers.

This summer, the trucks will be driven by the students in a "road rally" from Norman, Okla., to Detroit, said NU senior and project team co-coordinator Scott Phillips.

No pit stops are allowed, and each truck will be scored on a scale of 1,000 points in durability, acceleration and other areas.

While NU will use compressed natural gas, the U. of Maryland, College Park, SAE chapter is one of three teams using liquified natural gas because they say compressed natural gas systems require larger, heavier tanks that reduce mileage.

One Maryland student said the trucks can be converted to liquified natural gas by "replacing the stock throttle body injection system and adding a high energy, multi-coil distributorless, computer-controlled spark ignition system which will increase fuel economy, and reduce emissions that result from incomplete combustion. . . ."

Maryland senior Joe Muscara clarified the process using low-tech lingo: "We'll run some lines from some tanks."

A top prize of $5,000 will be awarded to the highest scoring team in the competition.

Other prizes include trophies and cash grants for the winning engineering schools.

Grads Trade Jobs, Salaries for Fulfillment of Teaching

By Laura Santini

■ The Daily Pennsylvanian

U. of Pennsylvania

After Audrey Hochhauser graduated from the U. of Pennsylvania in 1989, she did what many of her peers did: She entered the business world.

But after just one year in advertising she found her job dissatisfying and decided to return to Penn and study to become a teacher.

"I found working at the ad agency completely unfulfilling," she said. "The people who made it there sacrificed everything I hope to get out of life. Regardless of the money and whatever else comes with being a teacher, I decided it was what I wanted to do."

Over the past two years, enrollment in Penn's Graduate School of Education's Teacher Education Program has increased almost 60 percent and it will continue to increase, predicted Director of Admissions Margaret Harkins.

TEP is an intensive, one-year Masters of Education program that mixes coursework at the university with student teaching in inner-city public schools.

Dean Marvin Lazerson said renewed interest and optimism for teaching reflects a nationwide phenomenon.

"There is a tremendous growth in interest occurring across the nation," Lazerson said. "I think what came out of the 1980s was a strong sense that society had lost its ethical purpose. Now I see a clear willingness to take seriously that education is important."

Most of the GSE students said they were reluctant to pursue a career in education immediately after graduating from college because of the low pay and the lack of respect for the teaching profession.

Masters candidate Matthew Baird worked as a management consultant for three years in public transportation before he made the move from the business world to the classroom.

He said that his former job was good, but he is excited about being a teacher.

"(My former job) wasn't appropriate for me," Baird said. "I just reached a point a year and a half ago when I realized I'd rather be doing something else than being a management consultant. I wanted to impact people's lives more."

Baird added that going back to school to get certified in teaching is no longer unusual.

"People are open to teaching who weren't open to it before," he said. "They're starting to ask (themselves) what they want, and money is not as important as it used to be. You begin to hear of a lot more people like myself who made career changes."

Dean Lazerson said that the expected increase in teachers' salaries in the next decade and the openings created by the many teachers approaching retirement age will create a further incentive for prospective teachers in years to come.

But Lazerson added that competition is stiff for teaching positions in desirable school districts, and the nation's current economic crisis poses additional risks to the health of the education system.

Admissions Director Harkins said that in addition to people who are leaving other careers to study education, she has observed increased interest in undergraduates at Penn to transfer into GSE their senior year.

"I see a desire to do something about our society," Harkins said. "People are not just interested in being doctors and lawyers anymore."

was justified in the past with statements like, "There are no Tolstoys among the Zulus."

"It has to do with an interesting type of intellectual elitism that Western culture was the highest type of thought," Carlson said.

Jose Morales, a professor in the Rutgers Puerto Rican and Hispanic Caribbean studies department, said the student movement for multiculturalism has helped bring about changes.

"A lot of students are petitioning and saying, 'Why can't we have a class on Latin America in the history department and why can't we include the legacy of African Americans or American Indians?'" Morales said.

But some students say the diversity requirements are an inconvenience. Barb Christenson, a Michigan sophomore planning to apply to the business school, said she finds it hard to fit the courses into a schedule packed with prerequisites. Although she believes students should take the issue seriously, she said, "It's becoming a joke on campus. If I hear the word diversity one more time, I think I'm going to throw up. I think the university is shoving it down our throats."

And other students say the development of diversity courses alone will not create a more culturally aware student population. Michigan freshman David Mulder said, "If students are closed-minded, they are not going to change their views out of their own obstinance." In departments such as Rutgers' Africana studies department or women's studies department, one problem is the lack of diversity found among students who take the courses, Carlson said.

"Everyone wants to learn about themselves and no one wants to learn about anyone else."

Homeless Students Seek Shelter in Campus Buildings

By Jenny Loftus

■ The Pine Log

Stephen F. Austin State U.

Three to four homeless people are found living on the campus of Stephen F. Austin State U. each year—some of them students, said University Police Department Chief William A. Hill.

"They feel like they don't have anywhere else to live, (so) they decide to live on the university," Hill said.

Late last fall, university safety officer Carroll Bonnette discovered a male student living in the basement of the Griffith Fine Arts Building.

According to the UPD report, the student had been living there for several weeks. The report stated that Bonnette had found more than 100 cigarette butts next to the student's makeshift bed.

The student had set up a place to sleep and kept his clothes in a storage area in the basement. He allegedly gained access to the building from keys given to him by a staff member and had been drinking alcohol on the premises. He was arrested for public intoxication and taken to the county jail.

"This was not an isolated incident," the Hill said. "We find a few each year like those who have been either kicked out of the dorm or have other difficulties."

In another incident this year, a female student was found living near the post office on campus. "She was sleeping in the vending area with her head on a table," Hill said. "She wasn't endangering anyone. She was probably endangering herself more than anyone else."

Hill said other students have been found in various places. "It's not hard in a big academic building to (hide from authorities)."

Students are able to meet their daily needs by using facilities on campus. Most homeless male students use the showers in the community bathrooms in male residence halls; females usually use the facilities at the Health and Physical Education complex because it is hard to get into the female residence halls.

For food, most homeless students buy snacks in the vending machines.

When homeless students are found on campus, no provisions are made to find them a place to live. "There is a difference between people here and the homeless on the street," Hill said. "They do have access to funds somewhere. They have decided to try to get by without an apartment."

UPD has found a few people living on campus without connections to the university. "That's not unusual," Hill said. "Some move from university to university. They have access to everything they need."

"The university campus is an easy place to move into," he said. "It's not a good solution, but an easy answer."

LISA ELIAS, THE MINNESOTA DAILY U. OF MINNESOTA

Brawny and your family has flown the coop. What are you going to do? Me, I'm going to Disneyland," the band announcer incited a chorus of boos from the crowd.

The athletic department quickly responded with a one-game suspension and a new policy that forces the band to submit all their scripts to the department in advance.

But band members say they'll continue the wacky traditions and biting sarcasm they've become known for.

"I don't think we tread the ground any softer than we used to," said sophomore Tiffany Loewenberg, who has played trombone with the band since her first week at Stanford. "We don't want to follow rules."

Loewenberg said the Oregon show was her favorite, and she "didn't even notice the crowd was booing." This isn't the first time the band's taste and tact have come under fire.

Another controversial band show, "The Other Temptations of Christ," depicted Jesus being tempted to tear the tags off mattresses and to use a #4 pencil on the SATs. The trumpet section routinely drops its trousers, and when there's a swimming pool nearby, the entire band inevitably jumps in.

At the 1982 "Big Game" vs. the U. of California, Berkeley, the band prematurely ran on the field, thinking Stanford had won, and a trombone player was knocked over by a Berkeley player scoring the winning touchdown. Four years later, the band was suspended for urinating on the field.

Band manager Jesse Dorogusker said the band's status as a student-run organization frees it to be creative.

"The Stanford band is not like any of the marching fascist bands in this half of the country," Dorogusker said. "We're not limited in the things we can do. We're as fun as we want to be."

Band members organize road trips, plan shows, train each other and even assign grades for the one unit of athletic credit awarded to band members.

Almost everyone gets an A, especially because the band requires no previous experience. "If you can breathe, you can play," Dorogusker said.

He exonerated the band for the Oregon controversy. "We see our suspension as an external problem and not an internal problem. The problem is with our relations with the bureaucracy."

That bureaucracy is complex, and Dorogusker said part of the problem is the lack of supervision for the band, which is funded by the music department, the athletic department and the Associated Students of Stanford U.

Acting Athletics Director Alan Cummings said he "respects the band and its creativity, (but) we reserve some control over their activities in reviewing their scripts and all prior to their performances at football games."

The band's brand of satire can cause problems, Cummings said.

"Sometimes satire is not viewed as humorous to some people," he said.

But student attitudes toward the band are generally positive.

"I like the (the band) personally," said JJ Lasley, a junior running back for the Stanford football team. "I think they attract a lot of attention."

Lasley said in light of Stanford's mediocre football record over the past few years, he thinks more people come to see the band than to see the games.

He praised the military-style band at the U. of Southern California, but said he thinks Stanford's band fits the school's character. "We're Stanford, we're liberal and we should be different," Lasley said.

Meanwhile, band members say they'll keep up the satire. "We try to poke fun at things and make people think," said senior Joel Parker, who has been with the band since 1986.

"Every once in a while we succeed. More often than not, people don't know what we're talking about," Parker said, referring to some of the band's more obscure jokes. The spotted owl parody was anything but obscure, making the Oregon display "a really successful show," Parker said.

"At least they got what we were talking about."

Report, compiled by Victor Lindquist, director of the Northwestern U. Placement Center, lends support to Josephson's claims that anywhere from 12 to 24 percent of resumes contain materially false information. The 320 companies surveyed by Lindquist reported that one-third of the applications they receive are falsified.

"This kind of fraud in the marketplace is widespread," Lindquist said. "The willingness of people to risk careers is baffling to me."

Karen Schrameck, director of NAU Career Planning and Placement, said she has not witnessed a rise in dishonesty among graduates looking for jobs during her 14 years at NAU. "I don't think that they get any less immoral or amoral," she said. "I think this generation is prompted by a quality of life rather than money."

Schrameck said resume embellishing has not been a serious problem at Career Planning in the past. "It's probably done," she said. "There are always a few people who are willing to exaggerate."

As a member of the business world, Gresham said there is a definite pressure to succeed. "You're expected to perform," he said. "But that's not to say that you can't succeed without corrupting yourself."

Increased sexual irresponsibility, date rape and crime also are pinpointed as indicators of the moral backsliding of the "I Deserve It" generation. The Josephson study further indicates this generation has a greater tendency to shirk civic duties such as voting and working for political campaigns.

Andrea Margolis, executive assistant at the Josephson Institute, said the research process failed to uncover any optimistic information. "I'm not sure what the good news is," she said. "We didn't find any."

Margolis said there has been an increase in volunteerism in the 18-to-30 generation, but she said the rise could be attributed to mandatory volunteering programs and the desire to put altruistic work on resumes.

"There's idealism in this generation, but there's an overwhelming idea of 'me first,'" Margolis said.

Although no exact figure could be obtained for the number of "I Deserve Its" in the 18-to-30 generation, Margolis said it was "an unprecedented proportion."

According to the study, the "I Deserve Its" may not comprise a majority in the 18-to-30 generation, but that does not prevent this group of young adults from posing a threat to the future of humanity.

"The point is that a very substantial number of young adults are entering or advancing in the work force with a disposition toward behaviors that are bound to endanger business and society," the study states.

William Nietmann, NAU associate professor of philosophy, says he hasn't seen a dramatic deterioration of core moral values since he began teaching in 1966. "My experience has been not nearly as negative as that. The people that I know always try to be honest."

Contrarily, Sue Sisley, president of the Associated Students of NAU, agrees with the Josephson findings.

"We're into the fast-food mentality," she said. "It's a 'gimme, gimme' culture." Sisley said during her term as the head of NAU's student government she has witnessed the spectrum of ethical behaviors.

"I've seen a lot of ugliness and self-serving motives," she said. "The people who don't believe (the study) can continue to delude themselves."

Sisley, however, said she thinks Josephson is overreacting to the issue. "He's exaggerating our predicament to a far greater amount," she said. "But he is on track with the patterns that he's mentioned. He's identifying the symptoms. We're festering — we're nurturing that attitude."

Nietmann, who has been teaching ethics classes almost every year, says a dishonest person does not change, regardless of social trends.

"A person is as he does," he said. "If you're a cheat, you're a cheat through and through — your whole life."

Nietmann said the Josephson study shows concern for the future of mankind. "(Josephson) has given us some conclusions," he said. "He's alarmed and he thinks there's good reason to be alarmed."

The effort to revive the cartoon break series began in December, when Wood heard they were taken off the air and she petitioned ABC-TV to bring them back. Last fall, Wood attended a lecture by Dr. Odvard Egil Dyrli, an education professor who helped create Schoolhouse Rock. Dyrli asked the large class to indicate how many had watched the videos, and "virtually every hand went up. I was talking to the Schoolhouse Rock generation," he said. The series, which taught kids American history, grammar, science and math between cartoons, ran on ABC from 1973 until 1985. Dyrli said the network discontinued the series to fund other programs. Wood said she wants the funding returned to Schoolhouse Rock because they are effective teaching tools. "It catches kids off-guard. They don't even realize they're learning," Wood said the influence of at least one of the cartoons was evident when she entered high school. "Years later, in civics class, we had to write out the preamble to the Constitution, and everyone in the whole class was humming it," she said. A petition that Wood started at UConn garnered 650 signatures in one week, and she hopes the drive will spread to other colleges across the country. U.N. Opportunity . . . U. of Georgia junior Angie Garrett will be following in some big footsteps as the first undergraduate student to be granted an internship with the United Nations: President George Bush once served the same position. The internship program is directed by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research. UNITAR representative James Ram said interns for the United Nations normally are selected from Ivy League schools and are offered only to students working on post-graduate degrees. In December, Garrett learned she had been granted the internship based on her academic credentials and interviews. "It was an opportunity I couldn't pass up," Garrett said. Garrett's internship, tentatively scheduled for August through December 1991, will be more flexible than the usual program. Garrett said she must develop a research project relating to international business, after which she will present her findings

Just Like Mom Used to Make . . . Indiana U. residence halls have come up with a successful way to bring students back to the dining rooms — making their favorite home-cooked meals using their parents' recipes. "Our assistant director asked us to do something different," said Sandra Holk, director of Wright Quad dining hall at IU. The campus cafeteria directors had seen a sharp drop in the number of students eating in their cafeterias and wanted an idea to get students back. Wright Quad officials sent a letter to each student's parents, asking them to reply with their child's favorite home-cooked recipe, stating why it was a favorite and providing background information on the family. Holk said they received hundreds of responses. "We would change the proportions to fit that of the cafeteria setting," said Sandra Fowler, associate director of Campus Dining Foods. "We presented the meal in a special dinner setting . . . with special artwork on placemats and posted signs with pictures of the family. The artwork made it catchy and made the idea really fly." Currently, four of the seven dining halls at IU are involved in the program, which has received publicity on local television news, in local newspapers and on "Good Morning America." ■ Jennifer Spahn, The Maneater, U. of Missouri, Columbia

COMMENT AND OPINION

Freedom to Be Who You Want to Be

By Jill Miller

■ Indiana Daily Student
Indiana U.

So you're graduating. Or you just broke up with a longtime steady. Or you find yourself starting to wonder just what you're going to do with the rest of your life.

Welcome to the search. Or, more appropriately, THE SEARCH.

This search is more than questions about our jobs, our relationships and how we are going to repay our student loans. It goes much deeper than that.

Those of us who feel the search are questioning the structure of our lives, wondering how we can live happily in a society whose priorities are not ours.

Some simply don't feel the call to question. Some have known since they were 5 that they wanted to be doctors. Some can't conceive of living anywhere but where they grew up. Some have been engaged to their high school sweethearts since freshman year and have planned their kids three years apart.

I used to envy those who fall into this category. I used to desire that simplicity, that surety, that knowledge that life is sailing along on an even keel, all points of navigation already plotted, moving toward a destination where hotel reservations await.

I've since changed my mind.

I've reached a point in my life where the future is a blank slate, and as difficult as it is sometimes, I know now I wouldn't trade it for anything.

When your world as you know it is turned inside out, you probably go through three stages of feeling:

- Total, absolutely paralyzing fear (usually includes questioning self-worth and feelings of desperation)

- Anticipation rivaling that of an 8-year-old on Christmas Eve (may resemble drunkenness)

- A terrifying, exhilarating combination of the two (which means you alternate waking up with a grin on your face and waking up in a cold sweat)

But if we really think about it, we should be so grateful! We are as free as we ever will be. Life for us is absolutely open.

Yes, there are important decisions to make as we prepare to leave school. But the most important one isn't "What will my career be?" "Who will I marry?" or "Where should I live?" The most important question we must ask ourselves now is, "What is my dream?" And then, "How do I achieve it?"

Because now, as many 40-year-olds will tell you, is the time to pursue it. Very soon, our lives are going to get very complicated. And the one thing we won't have enough of is time.

There is plenty of time later to start our careers and "grow up," for those of us who plan to do so. When we sit at our desks, making comfortable money with a mortgage and children and thinking about how to spend our two-week vacation each year, won't it be good to look back on a youth that was really a youth?

The most interesting, alive people I've met are the ones who didn't jump right into a career after graduation. Those who took their dreams, no matter how impractical in society's eyes, and made them happen are the happiest and, incidentally, some of the most successful people I know.

A friend currently undergoing THE SEARCH has decided his first dream is to return to Germany.

Instead of worrying about how he will pay for the plane ticket, how he will get around once he's there and how he will survive on his own, he is taking the action necessary to make it happen.

He is living cheaply near his hometown, working a job he likes but can easily quit, and will have enough money saved up by next fall to go.

Take time to clarify your dreams. Have you always wanted to go to Alaska and work on a fishing boat? How about driving every mile of Route 66 or climbing Mount McKinley?

There are, I know, a thousand or more practical reasons to be sensible and settle down. There are built-in societal stops at every juncture for those who want to step out of bounds and take a risk.

But it is possible to live a deliberate, conscious life — one in which every step is taken because it feels right, not because it is what we think we're supposed to do or because our parents did it or our friends are doing it.

Take your time. Think a lot. Question everything. If nothing else, follow the advice of Jamie Baylis of The New Republic magazine: "Don't be a lawyer, don't be an investment banker and don't buy any heavy furniture."

Then, let the search begin.

EDITOR'S MAIL

Abortion vs. Human Rights

To the editor:

I'm writing in response to an article in the February 1991 issue of U. titled "UTA Students Nix Campus Abortion Plan." The article talked about Progressive Students' Union President Andy Ternay and his desire to see abortions provided on college campuses.

Ternay was disappointed that U. of Texas, Arlington, students voted down his proposal at their campus, and he stated, "In a more liberal school, I'll bet the vote could be even 95 percent in favor."

He may be right, and this leaves me both saddened and perplexed.

Most of the liberal students I've talked with take the moral high road with regard to human rights abuses. They are appalled by apartheid in South Africa, murderous regimes in Central America, American intervention in the Middle East, and other problems such as racism and homelessness — and justifiably so. I admire them for their stands on these issues, and their willingness to speak out about them.

But a paradox arises over the issue of abortion.

Many of these same students are strongly pro-abortion. They demand the "right" to dispose of their own unwanted unborn children whenever and for whatever reason they deem appropriate.

Isn't it just a bit hypocritical, however, to point fingers at human rights abusers half a world away while demanding the right to kill your own offspring?

If American college students truly care about human rights, they should start by examining their own stand on the human rights abuse that is abortion.

Would you elect President
Bush to a second term?

In the March issue, we asked students if they would vote to re-elect President Bush to another term. Fifty-five percent of those who responded said that they would vote for Bush while 45 percent said they would not.

"Absolutely. His foreign policy has been outstanding, and his domestic policy has been an attempt to make the best of a poor situation."

Mark Millen
Gonzaga U.

"No, I think he's done great at foreign policy, but he's been a mess at home, and I don't think he's done enough to actually work on America."

Rich Dominiak
Illinois Institute of Technology

"Yes, even though I'm a devout Democrat. I think he's doing a really good job. He did an excellent job during the Persian Gulf (War)."

Lessons I Learned In College

By Kurt Seidel
■ The Daily Collegian
Pennsylvania State U.

Looking back over my first year of college, I can point out several bits of knowledge I acquired.

I learned that I am more than just a number here. Sometimes I qualify as a letter, or even a word.

I noticed that time flies. Every weekend here at Penn State goes by as a blur of about two hours, and by the time I wake up on Monday, it's already Wednesday. By the time I look at the calendar, it's already next month.

I have learned how to get across College Avenue without getting killed — run. A WALK sign doesn't mean anything nowadays.

I learned there are no substitutes for a fully stocked fridge (that somebody ELSE stocked) and home cooked meals.

I learned that in a vacuum, a projectile's maximum height can be determined by $h = 2v \sin \theta / g$. But I have come to realize that the following situation will probably never occur: "Well, Mr. Seidel, I've seen your resume, and you can have the job if you can answer the following question: In a vacuum, what's the maximum height of a projectile?"

I have learned that budget deficits can sometimes lead to higher inflation and interest rates, which could be good or bad, but is not necessarily always the case. Flip a coin.

I have come up with a few axioms that govern life at Penn State. The frequency of laundry day depends inversely on how much underwear you have: the more underwear, the less frequently wash has to get done. You can wear other stuff like pants and sweatshirts almost indefinitely before you have to wash them.

Also, the amount of patience I have with the football team varies inversely with the intensity of my hangover.

Governing the dynamics of dorm life, I have noticed a disturbing fact: No matter what the temperature outside or inside the dorm room, my roommate and I can never agree on how far the window should be open,

Stars Shine As Social Activists

Recently, Hollywood celebrities have put aside their glamour image in favor of representing worthy causes and making statements. And more and more, college campuses are the scene for these celebrity-led crusades.

Woody Harrelson, who portrays bartender Woody Boyd on the television comedy "Cheers," has been making the rounds on the college circuit from California to Florida, taking a stand for the environment, leading anti-war demonstrations and even coaching campus basketball games.

While his screen character may not seem too aware of burning issues, Harrelson said he is "really angry at what is happening in the world," listing U.S. government foreign policy and ecological problems. About his lecturing, Harrelson said, "I want to effect change in any way I can."

Harrelson said he hopes that students will help him with his quest. "If I could impart any message to you, it would be never stop questioning. Continue to question what God is . . . and question your government most importantly," Harrelson told a class at the U. of Virginia. "I think the students are going to change the world the same way the students changed the world in the '60s."

Censorship of the arts is one topic that actor Ed Asner frequently speaks about. Asner, who played Lou Grant on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" and later starred in the spin-off, said he personally experienced the effects of censorship during his many years as an actor.

"The cancellation of 'Lou Grant' in 1982 was due partly to sponsors and right-wing groups protesting my outspoken political views," Asner recently told students at Eastern Oregon State College.

"Some critics say that actors shouldn't get involved in social causes or politics, that they should just hit their marks, say their lines, smile for the people," Asner said, but he feels the entertainment industry is too powerful for actors not to get involved and present these things to the public.

"With that power comes a responsibility to act accountably and use our influence carefully," said Asner. "In a very real sense the entertainment industry may be the only way to get through to the American public on important issues" such as homelessness and other world issues, he said.

Despite the problems of getting controversial topics played on television, Asner said, "The one thing we cannot afford to do is nothing. We need to be social arsonists to set people on fire for certain causes."

Harrelson and Asner are not alone in hoping to influence change by using their celebrity status. Lou Diamond Phillips, best known for his roles in "La Bamba"

Performers in Pain...

Students Risk Injury For the Love of Art

By Joe Gelpe
■ State Press
Arizona State U.

Arizona State U. student Melissa Opp is sitting in a chair, watching and listening to her fellow students rehearse a Beethoven piano concerto. She should be playing double bass with the ensemble, but her left arm is in a splint.

Opp did not injure it during a ski weekend or by throwing a fastball. She hurt herself doing the one thing she loves more than anything — playing the double bass.

After a week of pain and decreasing mobility in her wrist, Opp went to the student health center and was diagnosed with tendonitis, due to "overuse."

Opp is not alone. The results of a State Press survey indicate that 84 percent of ASU performing arts students experience some pain that they attribute directly to their arts.

The survey was based on a random sample of 215 of the university's instrumentalists, singers, dancers and actors.

Dancers, percussionists and string players seem to suffer the most, with 100 percent of dancers and percussionists and 96 percent of string players reporting pain. Of the dancers, 61 percent labeled their pain "frequent" or "chronic."

With the amount of pain indicated by the respondents, the need for adequate health care is great. But, in the opinion of many ASU students surveyed, the effectiveness of medical care at the university's Student Health Center leaves much to be desired.

"I've never had satisfactory results at ASU," said choral education major Scott Kovacs. "There seems to be a standard cure-all that the Student Health Center hands out, no matter what the problem. A lot of us vocal folks have a specialist we see on a regular basis. I see a laryngologist every month."

Dr. Deborah Garland of the Student Health Center did not try to make excuses for the low regard in which some performers hold her office, but she does observe that "medicine is a two-way street." She emphasizes that performers "need to

Stone, Kilmer Open Doors With New 'Rockumentary'

By Jason Stewart
■ Daily Bruin
U. of California,
Los Angeles

Reportedly early in pre-production, "The Doors" director Oliver Stone invited the three surviving band members to the studio to hear Val Kilmer's vocal tracks for one of singer Jim Morrison's songs. When one of the Doors asked if they were listening to Kilmer or Morrison, Stone knew his search was over.

It may sound a bit far-fetched, but it's not an isolated case. Writer Jerry Hopkins, who knew

Morrison and co-wrote his biography, "No One Here Gets Out Alive," reported that during his first meeting with Kilmer he momentarily forgot he was just talking to an actor. And Paul Rothchild, The Doors' original producer (and the musical producer for the movie), admitted he frequently called Kilmer "Jim" by accident. Rothchild went even further, challenging anyone to distinguish Kilmer's vocals if at all. This holds true especially at night. I'm a born-and-bred member of the "crack the window so we don't breathe the same dust and foot odor all night" camp. My roommate, on the other hand, is a staunch member of the "don't have the window open, because it could rain or get really cold, and where would we be then?" clan. I also have noticed that taking a shower at 7:45 a.m. in the dorm isn't a good idea if you like warm water.

I have realized that if I were to create a universe right now, it would have many serious mathematical errors and would probably collapse in on itself in about 15 minutes because of a faulty negative sign. God aced Physics 201, and is incapable of filling in the wrong dot by mistake even though he knew the right answer.

Because this list seems so all-encompassing, you may be wondering if there's anything I haven't nailed down. There is indeed. For instance, why do I go weeks without mail, and then one day on the way to lunch, innocently check in and get 14 million packages and letters? And, are the squirrels here of an inferior race?

All in all, my first year has forced me to be more self-reliant, more independent, and to think and study harder than ever before in my life. I can only hope that other freshmen got as much out of it as I did.

and the "Young Guns" movies, hopes to abolish Native American stereotypes and promote cultural understanding. "I'll use whatever I can to do that. Since I represent Native Americans on the screen and have become a role model in a very left-handed way, then I'll accept that responsibility," he said.

"It's a strange thing with actors — we're not politicians, saints or social workers — but for some reason, people listen to us, and hopefully, every once in a while, we have something important to say and can make a difference."

Rather than focusing on a particular issue, actress Marla Gibbs, who stars on the sitcom "227," said she thinks the solution to many of society's woes lie simply in bettering communication. And increased communication should begin in the home, with parents spending more time with their children, she said.

"Concentrate on people," she said. "Blend the young and the old so they learn how to communicate with each other."

Gibbs said people should take action to solve the world's problems themselves, instead of waiting around for other people to make the first move.

"Why don't you act!" Gibbs said. "It's impossible to make a difference if you don't start where you are."

identify themselves better."

"They would come in and say, 'I have hand pain,' and nowhere in the conversation would they mention, 'I play piano,'" she said.

For some performers, it seems the pain cannot be avoided.

Nancy Reyes, a junior dance major at ASU, said her teachers tell her to "push for more, push for more."

"But," added freshman dance major Laura Piu, "at the same time, they say, 'Don't strain yourself. You should know your own body.'"

Sometimes a student's eagerness to please and to push for the ideal form, especially in ballet, can make him or her forget about safety, leading to serious injury.

In her attempt to "push for more," Piu has suffered a host of injuries, including a pulled hamstring, a knee injury and a pulled groin muscle.

ASU performers are not alone. The same problems are prevalent at The Juilliard School in New York City, a top conservatory for music, dance and drama.

Joy Favula, registered nurse at Juilliard, estimates a "pretty high percentage" of the students suffer from pain.

Favula admits that much of the problem stems from the stress of student life and living in New York City. She added the competitive atmosphere and excessive hours spent in rehearsals lead to fatigue and often to injury.

In conjunction with the Miller Institute for the Performing Artist, a consortium of doctors who specialize in evaluating and treating performers' pain, Favula has built a program of education, prevention and treatment. She regularly counsels students on stress control, nutrition, lifestyle, exercise and proper rest. She also instituted monthly pain and stress prevention seminars at Juilliard.

Although most performers push themselves beyond their physical means in order to succeed in their highly competitive fields, graduate dance student Greg Nuber said he does have an alternative: the philosophy of ASU assistant dance professor Pam Matt.

"Pam Matt made me realize that achieving the ideal aesthetic in dance — which sometimes can be harmful to the body — isn't as important as having a long career," Nuber said.

On the other hand, ASU artist-in-residence Douglas Nielsen is concerned that playing it too safe makes for a less rewarding artistic experience.

"Dance isn't fair and it isn't safe," he said. "If you take the risk away, you take away the excitement."

Grant 'In Motion' Toward Top of Charts

By April Hefner

■ The Breeze

James Madison U.

A fresh, new sense of style and freedom highlights singer Amy Grant's latest release, "Heart in Motion," a title which aptly describes the contemporary Christian artist's new outlook on life as well.

"I have in the past felt a little bit of pressure to deliver a certain product," Grant said. "With this album I think I'm going back to my original focus of what I thought would be the most effective way to communicate Christ, which was in a very secular environment, a very mainstream environment."

Grant's "Heart in Motion" certainly fulfills that goal as the upbeat rhythms and steady beat give even the slowest feet an excuse to get up and dance. In fact, Grant cites her love for the "golden oldies" like early Motown and The Beatles as partial sources for her current album.

"The best thing about (Motown and Beatles) songs is that it's good, innocent fun," Grant said. "If you turn on the radio lately, it's hard to find just good, innocent fun partly because music reflects our culture. What was such a strong statement back in the 60s, 'I Wanna Hold Your Hand' — no one's going to say that now because the morality of our nation has catapulted into 'it's everything immediately.'"

Grant said she feels this concept deprives individuals of the true joy of relationships.

"Christians and non-Christians are looking to music that makes them feel good, that brings back joy."

"Heart in Motion" provides a unique perspective on joy as singles deal with a range of topics including Grant's marriage, her newborn daughter and the trauma of sexual abuse.

The lyrics maintain Grant's sense of innocence and purity, while the music itself retains energy and emotion, a concept somewhat difficult to comprehend with the commonplace vulgarity and profanity expressed by some of today's bands.

"Christians are in a unique position of being called to live lives of purity, and so as songwriters we come at love and we come at relationships with an innocence that's not fake," Grant said.

And relationships obviously enjoy a large quantity of Grant's time since the majority of songs on "Heart in Motion" center on her family and friends. Singles like "Good For Me," "How Can We See That Far?" and "Every Heartbeat" focus primarily around Grant's relationship with her husband, while "Baby, Baby" is dedicated to her newborn daughter Millie.

Writing songs about those everyday life experiences is crucial to Grant. In fact, one song on the album portrays her busy, everyday routine of balancing relationships with an expanding career.

During one song-writing session in which she was working with a friend on a song called "Passion for Life," she was interrupted by the need to change diapers and sterilize bottles, and was overcome by the daily pressures of her life. The single "HATS" was born to release the "neurotic" frustrations of trying to do everything at once.

"I told (my friend), 'What I don't need is a song called 'Passion for Life.' What I need is a song called 'Hats' because I can't figure out who I am. I mean, I'm supposed to get on stage and do one thing, and I'm trying to write this song with you, but really I ought to be in there washing bottles, rocking my baby and changing diapers eight more times before the night is up.'"

Another, more intense, song on the album resulted from a conversation in which a friend told Grant of her troubled childhood as a victim of sexual abuse.

"I thought about her nonstop," Grant said. "I woke up crying in the middle of the night. I could not rest until I cloistered myself away in the basement and screamed and cried and wrote this song called 'Ask Me.'"

The closing song on "Heart in Motion" drives home the message of Grant's purpose in life and in music. "Hope Set High" is dedicated to the youth who gather in the barn behind Grant's home every Friday night for a time of singing and fellowship, a time where she can share her faith in an atmosphere the kids can enjoy.

"As it turns out, the kids we've met through this weekly gathering brought about probably the most intense season that I've had in my relationship with the Lord, in my relationship with my family in years," she said.

in the film from Morrison's.

Even before the film was released, there seemed little doubt that Kilmer had accomplished something special with his interpretation of the now-legendary bad boy of the late '60s rock world. And all this from a relatively low-key 31-year-old actor who was previously known for his supporting part in "Top Gun" and starring roles in "Willow" and "Real Genius."

Despite considerable acclaim, though, Kilmer remains level-headed about his performance. "I don't think I discovered the 'real' Jim Morrison," Kilmer said. "I don't know who that is. He had a lot of personalities, that's for sure. But I discovered my version."

That version, by all accounts, is hair-raising in its similarities to the look, act and sound of the real musical shaman himself. But according to some friends of Morrison, the film does lack one crucial element to Morrison's personality — his sense of humor. Kilmer disagrees.

"I don't think it overlooked (his sense of humor), but there's a really impossible history leading up to (this film), and I think what Oliver Stone managed to embody was enough to be satisfied," he said.

"(Morrison) did have a great sense of humor — he was capable of being really sensitive and aware. But most of the stuff he did that got famous had much more to do with violence."

Kilmer's path to capturing the much-sought-after role (Tom Cruise, Charlie Sheen, John Travolta, U2's Bono and INXS's Michael Hutchence all were mentioned for the part at one time or another) was unusual. Stone admits Kilmer — based largely on his look — was one of his first choices before the actor was even aware of the project.

But Stone and Rothchild agreed they wanted someone who could sing the part. So Kilmer, at his own expense, produced an amateur video as Morrison, in which he sang a couple of his songs. According to Stone, the video didn't bowl him over, but it was enough to convince Rothchild he could work with Kilmer.

"I knew my limitations and I knew what I would have to build up to vocally," Kilmer said. "Part of it was I could sing higher than him and lower than him, but I couldn't sing just like him."

Surprisingly, though, Kilmer said his preparation for Morrison the man was much less researched than Morrison the singer. "I read parts of (his biography) but I tried to also be conscious that it was going to be Oliver's vision, and I didn't want to get behind an idea that became so overpowering that I couldn't do what Oliver was going to write."

For the most part, Kilmer didn't need to research

Morrison. "I always felt like him in every scene," Kilmer said. Instead, he experienced what Morrison did firsthand — sweaty leathers, raging crowds and the energy rush.

And what of the drugs?

"I used my imagination," Kilmer said. "It's interesting. For you, smoking a cigarette might be the same thing as Jimi Hendrix smoking a giant spliff — it might do the same thing to your body. And I couldn't really look at what (the drugs) would do to me, taking that much."

Kilmer admits a few people suggested taking acid "in a controlled environment," but he wasn't interested. Quite the opposite, Kilmer said he was actively concerned that the film not glorify or condone drug use.

"That was one of two things I said to Oliver when I first met him — 'If it promotes drugs or it's going to glorify alcoholism, then I don't want to do it.' Because I've been affected by that being in this industry and growing up in Los Angeles, and I've seen phenomenally talented people who aren't going to make it because half their heads are Jell-O. I just didn't want to be a part of that, and I don't think (this film) is at all," he said.

"(The movie) didn't make me tempted to be in his world, in his circumstances, which were very tortuous and a living hell," Kilmer said. "He was a challenge for me to live out my principles more completely, and I hope that's something audiences take away."

The Samples

The Samples is yet another band with a social conscience. Seems as though Greenpeace and Amnesty International are planning a hostile takeover of some of the major record labels, which might explain how The Samples got its record deal. Expressing desires for a cleaner planet and equal justice for all, The Samples sing about things that are pretty standard for "conscience rockers." But one aspect of this band sets them apart: their music. Songwriter Stan Kelly has a strong voice and even stronger songwriting ability. Reminiscent of Sting, his voice fits perfectly in the ensemble of instruments surrounding it. The music has an underlying reggae feel that is often lost, but the pleasant talent of the band never is. Clear acoustic guitar is heard throughout. In a time when so many established bands are aiming for a larger, more complete sound but only end up losing that special something they originally had, it may be wise to look at "The Samples" for an idea or two.

The Jack Kerouac Collection

Jack Kerouac was as much a musician as he was a novelist. Almost any Kerouac sentence, read aloud, takes on the spoken equivalent of a Charlie "Bird" Parker sax solo. "The Jack Kerouac Collection" is a boxed set reissue of three albums of poetry and prose readings originally recorded by the author in 1959. The discs feature Kerouac reading selections from his works, as well as previously unpublished material. Jazzy piano and sax accompany Kerouac, who died from an alcohol-related illness in 1969. Kerouac's legacy, the restless calling of a man's heart to experience everything firsthand, has never been so important. Nowhere is this so poignantly illustrated as in "The Jack Kerouac Collection." ■ Chris Lockett, The Tiger, Clemson U.

Job Shortage Will Increase Competition

Employment opportunities for graduating college seniors will decrease in 1991, making this year's shrinking job market the worst since the recession of the early 1980s, according to Northwestern U. and Michigan State U. surveys of the hiring practices of major companies.

"The past two years have seen the most serious drop in hiring quotas for new college graduates," said Patrick Sheetz, assistant director of the Michigan State U. Career Planning and Placement Services and author of the report Recruiting Trends 1990-91.

The MSU report surveyed 549 companies, and the results indicate 70 percent of these employers said students should be willing to take jobs for which they are overqualified. Sheetz also said not all college graduates will get jobs requiring degrees.

The Lindquist-Endicott Report produced at Northwestern U. makes similar predictions but indicates a few fields will grow.

"It looks like it is going to be a market with some cut-backs," said Victor Lindquist, director of the NU Placement Center and author of the annual Lindquist-Endicott Report, who surveyed 320 companies. "It means things will be more competitive."

The recession, rising inflation and this winter's Persian Gulf crisis have given businesses a sinking feeling about this year, Lindquist said. Sixty-one percent of the companies he surveyed reported that they expect business to decline or remain the same in 1991.

One telling statistic is that 67 percent of the companies

Arizona State U.

The sun shines 300 days a year at Arizona State U. The palm trees are pretty, but they don't provide shade during Arizona's famed heat waves.

And sometimes, on one of those dry, hot scorches, the couches in ASU's Hayden Library overflow with snoozing students taking afternoon siestas.

These images of ASU can be seen in one of a growing collection of videotapes designed by a national group of faculty advisers to present a candid view of American colleges.

Company officials are touting the tapes as opportunities for prospective students to view campuses before deciding to attend their "ideal" colleges. From the Ivy League schools to universities with extensive sports programs and smaller state and private colleges, the collection offers 20- to 120-minute tours of campuses in 35 states.

The general public can purchase any of 287 tapes from Collegiate Choice of Tenafly, N.J. The cost to families is $20 for the first tape and $15 for each additional tour.

Cliff Kramon, Collegiate Choice vice president, said most students encounter their chosen colleges only after the first tuition check is cut.

Expensive plane flights and hotel rooms can keep on-site college visits to a minimum, forcing college-seekers to base their decisions on hype-filled mailings and cut-and-dried course books, Kramon said.

Recognizing this problem, Collegiate Choice devised the tapes as a modern way to visit colleges across the country.

"If you watch these videos, you're getting just what we got when we took a tour of the campus," Kramon said. "You'll be one step behind us looking over our shoulders."

But some universities are crying foul, despite Kramon's insistence that the videos should not be used as replacements for personal visits.

"The complaints we get from students about these amateur videos is that they don't give an objective, complete picture of the campus," said ASU Admissions Director Susan Clouse.

Kramon disagreed, claiming that the videos, shot by a one-man camera crew, chronicle a regularly scheduled tour offered by the colleges — just as prospective students would take if they could make it to the school in person.

This simplistic approach to presenting colleges has drawn mixed reviews from purchasers of the tapes.

"The videos were not high quality — there was a lot of wind noise, and it was sometimes hard to hear the questions asked on the tours," said Barbara Barks, the mother of a Borne, Texas, high school student looking at colleges on both coasts. But others found the tapes highly useful and cost-effective.

"It's not financially possible to get to each university," said Carol Small of Bangor, Maine. "The tapes gave us a clear picture of the schools right away."

By ordering several of the tapes, Small said she and her daughter Heather were able to narrow the overwhelming field of attractive colleges down to a final three possibilities.

'Funky' Fashion Wins In Worldwide Contest

By Jennifer Jenks
■ The News Record
U. of Cincinnati

Last year, Kelly Ulrich spent $20 to turn five pounds of multi-colored leather scraps into a jacket to complete an assignment for her textiles and leather class. This year, the U. of Cincinnati senior fashion design major won second place — $1,500 — in the 91st World Fashion Contest in Gifu, Japan.

"I really wasn't expecting it," Ulrich said of the prize she won for her project, which she describes as "a multi-colored suede patchwork jacket that has embroidery stitching on each of the seams."

"It's the most funky thing I've designed," she said. "I like each garment for something different, and this one was neat for its funkiness."

To accompany the thigh-length jacket, she also designed a white, pleated linen blouse with a three-dimensional collar and a patchwork hat with brown crushed velvet trim. A pair of chocolate-colored tights completes the ensemble. The jacket was the only garment she entered in the contest.

She submitted her design six months ago along with 9,000 other competitors. Of these, 50 designs were selected for the contest in Japan.

"When you send something for a competition, it has to be really bold and flashy and stick out in your mind," Ulrich said. "So many things come down the runway that after a while they look like everything else."

She said the jacket's design was inspired by Victorian "crazy" quilts made from randomly sewn patches. Grace Meacham, Ulrich's instructor for the textiles course, said the jacket is technically complicated.

"It was very challenging because she in essence made her own fabric," Meacham said, adding that she was not surprised the jacket won second place. "The garment itself was a very strong design, and also, she was well-received by the Japanese."

Ulrich said the project was "a lot of work" and took her a full quarter to complete.

"It was pretty difficult because all the pieces were patched together randomly, not in squares," she said. "I used all shapes and sizes."

Gifu Fashion Industries, which sponsored the contest, covered the cost of Ulrich's airplane flight and two nights at a hotel.

She shared an interpreter with the other English-speaking competitor.

"Everything was in Japanese," she said. "I hardly understood anything. I was the only American, and there was someone from the (United Kingdom) and someone from Spain who knew a little English."

Ulrich said her jacket is more a creative statement than an actual garment. She said she probably will wear the jacket but not the whole ensemble. "Except maybe at a New York disco. Yeah, I could get away with it there."

Network Matches Needy Motorists

Entrepreneur Eric Kiernan is a travel agent of sorts. His business, Rider and Driver Service, matches students who need rides and riders to share expenses for weekend and vacation trips.

"I saw ads in sloppy handwriting from people who needed rides home," said Kiernan, a junior finance major at Syracuse U. "In another building I would see another ad for a person going in the same direction. It gave me the idea to connect these people together and network it through other colleges in the area."

He started his company with four colleges in Rhode Island: Brown U., Rhode Island School of Design, Johnson and Wales College, and the U. of Rhode Island. Kiernan brought Rider and Driver Service to Syracuse last semester, and the company serves two other local colleges: LeMoyne College and Onondaga Community College.

The service is based on a membership running from September to May. For a $30 fee, students may register as riders or drivers. After signing up, the students are interviewed, and drivers are screened for clean driving records and proof of insurance. Membership cards and numbers are issued, and students are matched according to destinations.

Kiernan said all members must notify Rider and Driver Service of their departures four days in advance. Members then receive telephone calls with the names and phone numbers of those with whom they have been paired.

"Once they join, the rider and driver are understood to be flexible to the needs of each other in terms of when they leave," he said.

Kiernan said he uses a "shooting point" when determining destinations. For example, if a student lives 50 miles north of Boston, Boston would be the destination point.

"You may be lucky and some drivers may take you to your doorstep, or you may be dropped off a half-hour away from home."

Rider and Driver Service gives travel opportunities to those who otherwise would not have them, and cuts gas and toll expenses for drivers, Kiernan said. Riders also help with driving and provide company in the car, making the service a good way to meet other students.

"For $30, you can use this membership as many times as you like wherever you want to go," Kiernan said. "Even if you use the membership only once, it has already paid for itself."

Kiernan said in the future he would like to open offices nationwide and eventually introduce the company onto the stock market.

Jobs

adjusting their goals in 1991 plan to decrease their hiring totals, Lindquist said. And the decreases will not be limited to hiring. Sixty-five percent of the companies plan to reduce their staffs this year.

According to the Lindquist-Endicott Report, 38 percent of firms surveyed plan to visit fewer campuses and conduct fewer interviews, but the report also indicated that some companies plan to expand in 1991. Twenty-four percent will be recruiting on more campuses and interviewing more graduates, the report stated.

Some NU students still have a positive outlook for their future salaries and careers, despite the reality of a recessionary job market.

Senior sociology major Cassandra Brown expects to make $20,000 to $30,000 as a social worker.

Brown said she doesn't think the recession will affect her directly, because social work programs already have been cut.

Job prospects are not decreasing in every field. Chemical engineering, computer science and other engineering fields will experience growth despite the recession, Lindquist said.

One alternative to entering the job market is going to graduate school, a move Lindquist said he does not encourage.

"I'm a big advocate of going to work for a year once finishing a bachelor's degree," he said. "One comes back with an enriched perspective on coursework."

But some NU students said graduate school is not such a bad option.

"Most of my friends are considering graduate school because of the job market," senior Kimberly Sipes said.

Lindquist said some companies will offer more "marketable" students 5 percent to 10 percent more than average entry-level salaries. Marketable students are those who have good grades, solid summer internships and extracurricular activities, he said.

"Companies don't want students who, when you look at their resumes, you say, 'Oh my God, what else did you do besides go to class and have a good time?'" Lindquist said.

Rejection

your ineptitude wasn't your fault. You know, the "we had a record number of applicants" line or the "you were part of our most qualified applicant pool ever" line. You'll do really well somewhere, someday, they say. You just won't do it here and you won't do it now.

The worst part of rejection letters is the fact that you never get used to them. The sting of receiving one never really subsides. Each one is stamped with that painful thought: You're not good enough.

Yet the only way to avoid getting them is to avoid following your dreams. I suspect that everyone who has wanted to do something has been turned away. But, either out of youthful determination or youthful foolishness, we continue to press on, hoping that someone somewhere doesn't send us the "I am sorry to inform you" letter. At least not this time.

America's Stinky Obsession

By Tony Nahra

■ Rocky Mountain Collegian
Colorado State U.

Americans are obsessed with smelling good. You can't go anywhere these days without having to take in some artificial scent.

You see, because we are human beings, it is necessary for us to wear perfume or cologne to repress our horrid natural body scents. If we did not, we could destroy the rainforests by simply walking through them, instead of having to go in there and chop them down.

Department stores realize our need for artificial fragrance, and they strategically place overly made-up women in their mid-40s throughout the store and arm them with bottles of perfumes — which have intriguing names such as Eternity, Fahrenheit, Carcass or Postnasal — to spray on you.

My sister eats this up. She loves running through the store acquiring as many scents as possible.

She then runs back to me and holds out her right wrist for me to smell. "How do you like this one?" I sniff it and nod. "And this one?" holding out her left wrist. I sniff it and nod. Then she sticks out her neck. I sniff it and nod. Then she puts her right knee to my nose. I sniff it. Then her left knee. The back of her ear. Her forehead. Her chin. Her back. Her upper lip. Her eyelids.

If the middle-aged women in the store don't get you, then the advertisers will. Advertisers try to link a scent with a certain fantasy lifestyle. name alone means nothing, but a fragrance with a short description of its personality can mean more than its literal meaning.

AD: Sensual. Passionate. Fervent. A romantic collage of the foliage of spring desires.

WHAT IT MEANS: You'll have hot sex tonight if you wear this stuff.

AD: A burly scent raging with the splendor of alpine wonder.

When college athletes retire from their sports, they often feel a loss of identity. Former athletes give advice on how to fill the void.

Athletes 'Lose Identities' Upon Retiring From Sport

By Karen Travis

■ Mustang Daily

California Polytechnic State U.,
San Luis Obispo

College athletes who retire from their sports often experience a void in their lives that sports used to fill, sometimes resulting in a loss of identity, according to psychologists. But experts urge students to continue with their education and find other activities on which to focus their energies.

"Everyone wants to have their own special niche," said Kim Wells, a physical education senior at Cal Poly State U., San Luis Obispo, who competed in gymnastics for four years.

"Sometimes, by participating in a sport, people find they have something that separates them from others," Wells said.

Wells found it difficult to give up gymnastics when her eligibility ended in spring 1990. Besides missing the camaraderie of the team and the excitement of competition, Wells felt a loss of identity.

"When I stopped doing gymnastics, nobody ever labeled me as 'Kim the gymnast' anymore," Wells said. "I was just 'Kim.'"

Jean Decosta, a human and organizational consultant in San Luis Obispo, said a feeling of uniqueness might set athletes apart from others. "Their sport gives them a special trait and often makes them feel confident and worthy," Decosta said.

Michelle Hansen, who played volleyball for Cal Poly for four years, also struggled with her identity when her eligibility ended. "People don't recognize me like they used to," Hansen said. "They don't associate me with volleyball as much because they have forgotten or are too young to remember."

If you know your chances of continuing the sport are slim, you've got to prepare for reality.

—Brad Ledwith,
Cal Poly
baseball player

Decosta said some athletes repress the fact that their career as an athlete is over.

"When you lose anything, you go through a grieving process," Decosta said.

"Denial, anger, depression and acceptance are normal phases to go through and are important in regaining identity," she said.

"The important thing is to replace the loss with something new, something just as meaningful and satisfying as the former sport," Decosta said.

Tom Henderson, the men's track and field coach at Cal Poly, agrees.

"Sports are a big part of an athlete's

New Math Class Tackles Analysis of Sports Questions

By Sonya Martinez

■ The Stanford Daily

Stanford U.

Have you ever wondered what the precise odds are of a football team with a halftime lead going on to win the game? What is the relationship between body weight and the ability to lift weights? How quickly are the records of sports teams improving?

The Stanford U. mathematical and computational science department has created an innovative new course just to answer those questions: "Mathematics of Sports." The new class is taught jointly by statistics Professor Thomas Cover and mathematics Professor Joseph Keller, and focuses on the mathematical analysis of various sports questions.

According to the course description, "Mathematics of Sports" seeks "a mathematical analysis of the physical and biological aspects of human performance." In practice, this means exploring a wide variety of questions, which include strategy, probability and biology.

Among the questions explored in the course are the following: What is the effect of being right-handed

Students Can Get More A's by Getting Better ZZZ's

By Margie Luck

■ New University

U. of California, Irvine

What do Rodney Dangerfield and sleep have in common? Both of them get no respect, according to nationally known sleep expert Benjamin Plumb.

Plumb, who is president of the Miami-based company Micro/Somnia, sleeps four and a half hours per night, and has done so since 1982. His company specializes in helping people reduce their amount of sleep.

For college students, however, Plumb suggests a change in attitude toward sleep, not necessarily a change in hours.

"Students tend to see sleep as a commodity to be used and abused wherever they see fit. That is the most prevalent attitude. Sleep is something to be respected and not abused," he said.

Plumb's book, "Grade-A

Sleep, Grade-A Student: The Micro/Somnia Sleep Management Program for College Students," suggests among other things that students should avoid four substances as much as possible, particularly before going to bed: alcohol, drugs, nicotine and caffeine.

Avoiding substances alone, however is not the only way to get better sleep — and, according to Plumb, improved grades. He said exercise is very important, though it should be done in moderation.

"A moderate amount (of exercise) will reduce stress and improve stamina," Plumb said. He added the ideal workout would be three exercise sessions a week, 15 to 20 minutes per session.

But for many students, it all comes down to how they can improve their grades. A big misconception is that cramming all night for an exam will help get that desired score.

"Better sleep is fundamental to being able to increase your attention span and your concentration," Plumb said.

"If you're suffering from lack of sleep you're not going to perform as well on the exam as you identity and life," Henderson said. "But if removed, it forces a reconstruction of lifestyle."

Tim Thornburg, a human development graduating senior, did alter his lifestyle after his football eligibility ended last fall. "I knew it was coming and that I didn't have a chance at a professional career," said Thornburg. Instead, he turned his goals from athletics to school. "Now, I'm so busy I don't have time to think about missing football," Thornburg said.

Linda Lewis Griffith, in an article entitled "Life After Sports" in Women's Sports, concluded that retirement from sports is not always easy. "Often, athletes have spent so much time perfecting sports skills that few outside interests are developed," Griffith wrote. "Without the sport role, these athletes feel less important or of less value as human beings."

Most athletes who do not cope well with leaving a sport are those who have sacrificed personal, social, educational or vocational development for their sport. "The extent to which one's identity and self-concept have been woven in the performance of that role is directly associated with the difficulties encountered," Griffith wrote.

Brad Ledwith, a speech communication junior and member of the Cal Poly baseball team, thinks the best way for athletes to prepare for retirement is to come to terms with themselves.

"If you know your chances of continuing the sport are slim, you've got to prepare for reality," Ledwith said. "But also, always make the most of where you are at that time."

Cal Poly graduate Keith Jarrett agrees with Ledwith. After playing football for five years at the college level, Jarrett is now trying to come to terms with himself and put his energy into his career. Jarrett said, however, that the transition is always going to be hard for people who don't realize it's over.

"But you can't dwell on it," he said. "Life goes on, and you have to move on to what's next."

or left-handed in baseball? Is bunting a good idea or a bad one? How do variations in technique and equipment affect performance?

As an example, Keller explained that the class looks at data on the success rates of bunting under various conditions in the past and will find that under some conditions, bunting is more favorable than "playing it straight," while under others, bunting is a disadvantage.

The class also examines traditional sports statistics and the development of new statistics, and covers game theory, a field that applies mathematics to the problem of creating optimal strategies in sports.

Mathematics Professor Bradley Efron, chair of the Mathematical and Computational Science program, said this may be the first such class in the nation, and "I can guarantee you it's the best, because these guys are the best."

They also happen to be interested in sports.

"I wish I were a better performer, but maybe I can make up for it by figuring out what to do, if I can't (play sports)," Keller said.

Obsession

WHAT IT MEANS: You're at a Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant.

When words are not enough, advertisers create unique and interesting commercials — most of which do not make any sense at all. For example, the Obsession commercial lures consumers in with deep, philosophical and undecipherable dialogue:

(Close in on a room with a bunch of weird-shaped blocks. Everyone is wearing white bedding material. No one has a normal haircut. The men have lipstick on.)

MAN WITH BOWL CUT: For the love of life, let the sins of love suppress me.

WOMAN WEARING A MATTRESS PAD: O, let passion overcome my inner desires.

MAN WEARING A PILLOWCASE: Alas, the charisma of my kidney waketh in the morn, for I am all but a dagger!

WOMAN WEARING A MATTRESS PAD: (hugging Man With Bowl Cut and sneering at Man Wearing A Pillowcase) Your kidney hath no love! For I have discovered love and suppression in this man's kidney!

MAN WEARING A PILLOW CASE: (Cutting off a pillow tag with the dagger) If living with my kidney is a sin, then let me be guilty.

(Fade to phallic perfume bottle.)

Of course, if strong-smelling perfumes are not your thing, you can always shower with deodorant soap.

Coast, for example, claims its scent wakes you up. In the commercial, a weary woman drags herself out of bed and crawls into the shower. In the shower, she sniffs the soap and suddenly her eyes pop open, and she finishes her shower while singing and dancing as if she were the star of "A Chorus Line."

Believe it or not, Coast's eye-opening ability has done some good in the world, as shown in this Magahogan Daily article:

MAGAHOGAN, Wisc. — Steven McDouglas, a man who was a vegetable for 17 years, was suddenly awakened when a nurse who was giving him a bath accidentally passed a Coast deodorant soap bar close to his nostrils. "If living with my kidney is a sin, then let me be guilty," he said, donning a pillowcase.

I'll be on a plane out of here before the ink on my last final is dry.

Sleep

would otherwise."

While doing research for his book, Plumb began to realize the importance of keeping resting patterns regular. Many students build up what Plumb calls "sleep debt." This happens when students deprive themselves of sleep Monday through Friday, and then sleep all weekend, a practice Plumb described as "not a healthy lifestyle."

Dr. David Engstrom, mental health director at the U. of California, Irvine, Student Health Center, sees a lot of UCI students with sleep problems.

"There are a number of factors, especially a lack of proper exercise and changes in sleeping schedules caused by studying," Engstrom said.

He said the so-called "magic number" of hours students think they should sleep per night — usually eight — is a fallacy.

"There's a very wide range of needs for sleep," he said. "The idea of 'we all need eight hours, or five hours, or 10 hours of sleep' is just wrong."

Like Plumb, Engstrom said he believes that not keeping a regular sleeping pattern is the worst thing outside of taking sleeping pills that students can do.

"The biggest mistake students make is not keeping a consistent get-up time throughout the week. If you get up at 8 a.m. all week long and then, when Saturday comes, sleep until 12 p.m., you throw yourself off," Engstrom said. "You should stay within one hour or two of your normal get-up time, especially if you have insomnia."

Dr. Robert Moore, medical director of the UCI Medical Center, said he disagrees with Plumb's assertion that individuals, on the whole, are sleeping too much. He said the normal range of sleep is between five and nine hours, therefore the true average is seven.

"Everyone thinks, 'I'm going to study all night for a test and do better,'" he said. "That is a fallacy. Your performance will decline merely as a factor of sleepiness."

Though it's a common occurrence for students to do all-night study sessions, experience has changed many of their study habits for the better.

"I rarely do all-nighters now, but I used to freshman year," said Mark Wadnizak, a junior history major at UCI. "I value sleep too much. Anyway, there's a point where you can't absorb anymore."

"I'll sleep at least six hours the night before a test," he said, adding he generally sleeps around eight hours and wishes he could get by on less.
